Executive Structure

National Executive Council

4.1.1 National Executive Council is the highest decision-making authority of the party and decides the direction the party will take to achieve its goals. It is made up of the Party Leader and at least 5 Executive Council Members who are all signed and paid-up party members.

4.1.3 It has the authority to: Establish temporary as well as permanent sub-committees as needed to perform necessary functions that aid in achieving the party's vision and goals; oversee disciplinary processes; decide how the party funds are allocated; choose and appoint candidates for elected positions; convene meetings when necessary; set out specific goals for the party; delegate tasks when necessary.

4.1.4 The party leader has veto rights, especially when decisions undertaken are contrary to the party's founding principles and values.

4.1.5 External advisors can be called on to attend the meeting for consultation and advice to aid the council with decisions.

4.1.6 For a resolution to be undertaken the Party Leader must be present, as well as 2 National Executive Council members, as long as all NEC members have been informed.

Office bearer titles include: Party Leader, Chairperson, Secretary General or any other title that is appropriate for the needs of the party at the time. With the exception of Party Leader, new office bearers are appointed annually.

The IRT works to put the NEC vision into action and has an operational function. The IRT also works to formulate solutions for the country in the new electoral system we propose, as directed by the NEC.
